A bit about myself...

I am a teacher who teaches hearing impaired children (hard of hearing and deaf, some with hearing aids, others without, and some with cochlear implants). In my B.Ed studies I chose the route of hearing impairments and ever since then I have been involved in the field of hearing impaired pupils and their needs, and I love my work.

In my M.Ed studies I continued in the special education route and studied inclusive education. I enjoyed every minute and experienced great satisfaction in my studies. When I graduated, I wanted to continue towards a PhD degree, but could not afford it, and knew I would get there.

In July 2016, I received a call from Ohalo College, inviting me to become a lecturer and a pedagogical instructor in the special education route. I knew that was a proposal that one does not get every day, and certainly not one that a person wants to turn down. I welcomed the opportunity, and I am excited about the fact that I can teach student-teachers and contribute from my knowledge and years of experience, and I realized that part of my commitment to Ohalo College and the Council for Higher Education is to get my PhD degree.

I would be happy to study for my PhD degree and conduct research in my field, special education, on an issue that pertains to hearing impairments, a field to which I am connected, since I believe when one does what one loves, the result is good, effective and satisfying.

Sincerely,

Iris.
